In the present study, a microbial fuel cell (MFC) with an immobilized nano-hydroxyapatite (n-HA) layer was investigated. This was achieved by fabricating a new composite polymer by mixing a n-HA suspension (17.8 mg/mL) with a polyvinyl alcohol (PVA) solution (3 wt%). This composite polymer was used to immobilize the n-HA biocatalyst on the anode chamber surface of an MFC. This MFC with an n-HA layer was able to produce maximum power of 8.8 W/m³ at a maximum current density of 0.42 A/m³, when the influent wastewater had a chemical oxygen demand (COD) of 572 mg/L, a total solid (TS) of 27 mg/L, and an electrical conductivity (EC) of 14.9 mS/cm. This was approximately three times higher than the power produced by a conventional MFC with an unmodified anode. This study reveals the potential for n-HA-modified MFCs to be used for treatment of real wastewaters.
